Key insights from caregivers of child sexual abuse material survivors

Presented by Katelin Neufeld, Canadian Centre for Child Protection

Child sexual abuse and its recording are crimes that not only impact survivors, but also their entire family. Having shepherded their survivor child through the aftermath of the abuse, caregivers have unique insights. Their experiences can help inform policies to better support families impacted by child sexual abuse material (CSAM). Toward this goal, we present findings from an international survey of CSAM survivors' caregivers (N=19). A thematic analysis found several key themes: Negative impacts on the caregiver and family; inadequate and retraumatizing responses from systems; hope and resilience. We will discuss data-driven recommendations for change, including an initiative to end the investigative practice of showing CSAM to survivors and caregivers.

Sexual harassment, aggression and violence victimisation among mobile dating app and website users in Australia

Presented by Dr Heather Wolbers, Australian Institute of Criminology

Use of mobile dating apps and websites has increased exponentially in the past 10 years. While these platforms create opportunities to develop and pursue social, romantic and/or sexual relationships both online and in the real world, media reporting and broader commentary has raised concerns about users being subjected to high levels of sexual harassment, aggression and violence. We surveyed 9,987 dating app or website users in Australia to explore the prevalence and nature of dating app facilitated sexual violence (DAFSV) victimisation within the sample. Findings provide valuable information to aid development of policies and practices to prevent the occurrence and recurrence of DAFSV.

Responding to misconduct and criminal offending: A justice case study 15.30 – 16.15

Dr Adam Tomison, WA Department of Justice

Since 2019, the WA Department of Justice has significantly enhanced its response to alleged misconduct and criminal offending committed by staff and contractors. The impetus for the change was a series of reports from the WA Corruption and Crime Commission, which highlighted serious misconduct risks and corrupt behaviour in Corrective Services and that the initial Corrective Services response was not sufficient. Given the current interest in corruption and misconduct prevention and intervention, this presentation will describe the corruption and misconduct risks that are present in a corrections environment and other areas of the Department of Justice as a public service agency; key concerns raised in relation to the effectiveness of the Department's response; and describe the significant work undertaken to enhance the prevention, detection and management of misconduct and criminal offending in the Department. There will be a particular focus on the continuous improvement approach taken and the importance of partnering with investigatory bodies that can utilise statutory powers to investigate serious corruption and misconduct. Further, that misconduct does not occur without due consideration to agency culture and the need to creating a seamless assessment and intervention model that addresses misconduct, but also poor performance and allegations of bullying and harassment. The latter may not necessarily be serious misconduct, but still requires an accurate and timely response. Allowing such behaviour to occur unchecked can impact negatively on agency culture and may become, or lead to, subsequent misconduct.

Adolescent Relational Violence and Adolescent Radicalisation - a new collaborative pathway for intervention

Presented by Dr Lauren Moulds, Exceptional Needs Unit / University of Adelaide

Adolescence is a time of social development with marked points of opportunity and development, particularly around relationships. emotional management, problem solving and identity. Without appropriate skill development, modelling, and pathways of connection this vulnerability can lead to pathways of violence towards family members or partners. Experiences of being either victim or perpetrators of family or intimate partner violence is noted in the emerging literature and practice of countering violent extremism intervention. This presentation will cover research linking radicalisation to family and dating violence and outline why adolescence is the critical time to intervene. It will discuss how this has been piloted in South Australia with case studies and learning shared and discuss the implications for broader practice.

Impact of darknet market seizures on fentanyl and opioid availability

Presented by Emeritus Professor Rod Broadhurst, Australian National University

Data collected throughout 2019 from 12 Tor darknet markets that sold opioids, including fentanyl and carfentanil, enabled observation of the impact of law enforcement market closures on the availability of opioids, especially fentanyl. Trends in opioid availability before and after law enforcement intervention (e.g., Operation SaboTor) indicate whether vendors are deterred or if closures lead to displacement, dispersal, or substitution. Evidence of these outcomes was present in both descriptive and trend analyses, although some effects were short lived. Market closures, especially law enforcement seizures, reduced the availability of opioids, in particular fentanyl, as well as increasing prices and displacing or dispersing vendors to other markets.

Stakeholder perspectives on restorative justice for sexual violence

Presented by Dr Siobhan Lawler, Australian Institute of Criminology

In 2018 Phase 3 of the restorative justice scheme (RJS) in Canberra was enacted to include matters involving family violence and sexual violence. This presentation will provide an overview of the literature on restorative justice for sexual violence, and report findings from interviews with key stakeholders directly or indirectly involved with delivery of Phase 3. Stakeholders interviewed include restorative justice practitioners, police, magistrates, lawyers, academics and support service representatives. The findings contribute new evidence on stakeholder perceived outcomes and barriers associated with a restorative justice response to sexual violence.

Australian youth responses to online violent extremist content: A quantitative and qualitative examination

Presented by Dr Julian Droogan, Macquarie University

This presentation delivers findings from our ARC Discovery project into how young people interact with online violent extremist material in Australia. Adopting a youthcentric perspective, and drawing on data from surveys and focus groups, it explores the emotional and behavioural responses young people report when navigating the diversity of violent and extreme material that they interact with online. The findings challenge assumptions that terror or trauma are the primary emotional responses to these online environments. It reveals that young Australians have relatively sophisticated relationships with online violent extremism, and that these are central to their social identities. The research adds nuance to concerns about processes of radicalisation and online vulnerability.

CVE Diversion and Rehabilitation Programs: What works (or not) in Australia

Presented by Professor Debra Smith and Dr Muhammad Iqba, Victoria University

This presentation will provide preliminary research findings from an Australian diversion and rehabilitation program supporting people at-risk of, or who have engaged in violent extremism. The presentation will discuss what a holistic approach to diversion and disengagement entails and provide evidence-based insights into the timeframes for meaningful change to take place. It will also consider the different understandings of "success" between stakeholders, the issue of disguised compliance, and how to avoid inadvertently undermining chances of success.

Adverse childhood experiences and trauma among young people supervised by Youth Justice

Presented by Catia Malvaso, PhD, The University of Adelaide

This paper examines the prevalence of adverse childhood experiences (ACEs) in a representative sample of young people under Youth Justice supervision in South Australia. Data were collected from self-report assessments administered to 184 young people, which were subsequently linked to administrative records. The analysis showed that not only was the prevalence of ACEs particularly high in this population (89% experienced a combination of maltreatment and household dysfunction), but so too were trauma symptomatology, substance use, and internalising and externalising behaviours (with more than two thirds of young people scoring in the clinical ranges on each of these measures). Using latent class analysis, four distinct subgroups of young people were identified according to different patterns of ACEs experienced.

Grievance-Fuelled Violence: The Story So Far

Presented by Emily Corner

Acts of extreme or mass violence perpetrated by lone individuals have become increasingly common in liberal democracies over the past 20 years. Despite the enduring concerns regarding violent extremism, the perpetrators of these incidents show a lack of demographic, ideological, or psychological profiles. Some of these acts have been described as politically motivated terrorism, whilst others attributed to mental illness or criminal intent. This has led to the development of distinct research and practice areas focusing on either terrorism, mass murder, fixation, stalking, or familial and intimate partner homicide. However, there is an increasingly common view that the distinction between political ideology, criminal intent, and personal motivations is often blurred, and that the violence carried out by these individuals is better understood using the broader concept of grievancefuelled violence.

Community First Development

Presented by TBC

Community First Development undertakes social and economic development, and research projects in partnership with First Nations communities, businesses and people. They ensure Communities have control; they name the priorities and choose the design, assets, capabilities and approaches to achieve their vision, with a standard set of data principles applied and adapted across a broad range of areas. Community First Development then tailors the support through community partners, skilled staff, trained volunteers, key supporters and service providers.

Secrecy, control and violence in women's intimate relationships with child sexual abuse material offenders

Presented by A/Professor Michael Salter and Delanie Woodlock, UNSW

Many child sexual abuse material (CSAM) offenders have nonoffending partners who are impacted by their CSAM use. However, the specific dynamics of CSAM offending within a relationship or family context has been overlooked in forensic research, while scholarship on domestic violence and coercive control has not focused on CSAM offending as a possible correlate of domestic abuse. This presentation reports on the findings of the first research study to examine the crossover between domestic violence, coercive control and CSAM offending in intimate relationships. The presentation draws on interviews with 10 women and 8 anti-violence workers to explore how CSAM features within patterns of domestic abuse.

Offending

Presented by Tegan Insoll and Anna Ovaska, Protect Children

Protect Children specialists, Anna Katariina Ovaska and Tegan Insoll, will present innovative new research conducted in the dark web on users of child sexual abuse material (CSAM). They will provide insight into the unconventional methodology and the key findings of the research survey. The specialists will delve deeper into the research conducted on the connection between CSAM use and directly contacting children, and the associated risk factors. Finally, they will demonstrate the practical implications of offenderfocused research, by introducing the ReDirection Self-Help Program, which was developed by Protect Children with an aim to offer a resource to stop the use of CSAM.
